Local oriented, national oriented, global oriented: The choices of Latgale

Aim of the paper is to discuss a manifold orientation of Latgale towards glocalisation as a linguistic concern. Through the analysis of the results of a large poll, the Survey Latgale, we will show how multilingualism can lead to different societal approaches to globalisation emerging from different encoding of the varieties into the local repertoires.

Language attitudes and declarations of 'opportunity of usage', of the three main varieties of Latgale, namely Lagalian, Latvian and Russian will be the main concern of the analysis. This way we will provide a geographic oriented typology of glocalisation language phenomena within Latgale Society.
